Conventions

- It is very important to name your images properly.
- One of the easiest ways to name an image is to name the image the same name as the title of the page for example if we are working on the Faculties pages a good name for the images that appears on the Faculties pages would be:
 - Faculty of Science – faculty-of-science.jpg
 - Faculty of Humanity – faculty-of-humanity.jpg
 - Faculty of Health Sciences – faculty-of-health-sciences.jpg
 - If we are on the Faculty of Science Department (or other sub pages) a good naming convention would be:
 - Faculty of Science Department – faculty-of-science-department.jpg

Tips for a Strong Scholarship Application

Posted By: Super Admin

Description :

1. Be specific about your skills

When higher education institutions are reviewing your application, they want to know what your skills are and how they are relevant to the program you are applying for. They want to know how you will use your technical and educational skills to improve your community. Be specific and elaborate on your skills and experience, making that direct connection with what you hope to take away from this next phase of your education.

2. Craft a compelling statement

Each scholarship application requires a statement about why you are applying. Our partners recommend that you make this statement strong and compelling. Write about what you have done, how you have helped people and what you are doing for your community and country. Take time with your statement to effectively communicate who you are and help your application stand out amongst the others.

3. Be authentic

Our partners like to see authenticity in applications. Tell your story: who you are, what experience you have and what you are looking to accomplish. Take the time to reflect on your life story. What makes you a strong academic and personal
